acknowledge that we are fighting not just systems of oppression, but ourselves as people who can never claim to stand completely outside of those same systems.

Thus although the WSF was an amazing site of creativity, resistance, and courage, it was an imperfect space. It is a work in progress that can be admired for serving as a source of inspiration for activists who can afford to go there, and which must also be critically and constructively evaluated in an effort to expand upon its considerable potential for engendering social transformation.

2 The York University union of graduate assistants, teaching assistants and contract faculty.
5 All of these communities are separate and distinct from one another and are governed in accordance with the desires and needs of specific localities.